Coronavirus Michigan

Updated March 21

Schools have closed and Michiganders are staying indoors during the COVID-19 crisis. Business are shut and some are out of work, which means that some families will not have enough food or resources for the coming weeks.

There are about 750,000 children in Michigan who receive free and reduced lunch at school, Gov. Gretchen Whitmer said Tuesday. To ensure children are still getting nutritious meals, school districts throughout the state are setting up food distribution sites. Private businesses and neighbors are chipping in with food, internet service and cash, too.
